

Dr. John F. Kelly PhD, FAPA, is the Elizabeth R. Spallin Professor of Psychiatry in Addiction Medicine at Harvard Medical School. He is the Director of the Recovery Research Institute at the Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH), the Associate Director of the Center for Addiction Medicine at MGH, and the Program Director of the Addiction Recovery Management Service. Dr. Kelly is a former President of the American Psychological Association's (APA) Society of Addiction Psychology, and is a Fellow of the APA and a Diplomate of the American Board of Professional Psychology. He has served as a consultant to U.S. federal agencies and non-federal institutions, as well as foreign governments and the United Nations. Dr. Kelly has published over 200 peer-reviewed articles, chapters, and books in the field of addiction medicine. His work has focused on addiction treatment and the recovery process, mechanisms of behavior change, and reducing stigma and discrimination among individuals suffering from addiction.

Dr. John F. Kelly is a renowned addiction expert and clinical psychologist who currently serves as the Director of the Recovery Research Institute at Harvard Medical School. The Recovery Research Institute is a leading research center focused on improving the quality of addiction treatment and recovery through scientific research.

Dr. Kelly's research focuses on the assessment and treatment of addiction, and he has published extensively in this field. He is particularly interested in the use of technology to enhance addiction treatment and recovery outcomes. He has also conducted research on the effectiveness of mutual help organizations, such as Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous, and he has developed and tested a number of behavioral interventions for addiction.

Dr. Kelly has received numerous awards for his contributions to the field of addiction research and treatment, and he is widely recognized as a leading authority on addiction and recovery. He has served as a consultant to many organizations, including the National Institute on Drug Abuse, the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, and the World Health Organization.

In addition to his work at the Recovery Research Institute, Dr. Kelly is also a Professor of Psychiatry in Addiction Medicine at Harvard Medical School and the Associate Director of the Center for Addiction Medicine at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Dr. John F. Kelly has several clinical credentials. He is a licensed clinical psychologist in the state of Massachusetts, and he is also a board-certified clinical psychologist with the American Board of Professional Psychology.

In addition, Dr. Kelly is a Fellow of the American Psychological Association (APA) and he has served as the President of the APA's Society of Addiction Psychology. He is also a Fellow of the American College of Psychiatrists and a Diplomate of the American Board of Addiction Medicine.

Dr. Kelly received his Ph.D. in clinical psychology from DePaul University in Chicago, and he completed his clinical internship and postdoctoral fellowship at the Addiction Treatment Services at the Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Brockton, Massachusetts.

Overall, Dr. Kelly has extensive clinical experience in the assessment and treatment of addiction, and he has conducted research on a wide range of addiction-related topics. His clinical expertise is widely recognized in the field of addiction medicine, and he has been served as a speaker at many national and international conferences on addiction and recovery.